Follow-up: rate change, instalment pressure and customer response

Team,

Before this becomes another standing report, can we answer the real question?

Loan Products needs to identify borrowers most exposed to repricing and the questions customers are likely to raise. The possible stories are that variable-rate customers show higher payment pressure, that clear communication reduces avoidable complaints, or that thin affordability buffers matter more than loan size.

This has returned because the previous answer was useful but not strong enough to become a standing rule. Use July 2022 as the new evidence point rather than recycling the earlier conclusion. The operating teams agree that more journeys are failing; they disagree on whether the customer, the bank or a downstream party owns the failure. The first extracts did not reconcile, which means source precedence and exclusions must be part of the answer.

Please prepare a short decision pack with no more than five slides and an attached evidence table. The output must help us decide which customers need proactive communication and which product assumptions need review.

Data available: the latest closed loan files available by the request date, including affordability, pricing and origination risk fields; collections cases, promises to pay and recovery payments; customer contacts, complaints and suggestions; transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context.

Please state the limitation plainly: Use recorded loan rates and behaviour; do not infer contractual repricing terms not present in the data.

Thanks
