Which loan vintages are seasoning badly? - 2023 control review

Team,

Before this becomes another standing report, can we answer the real question?

Portfolio risk is being discussed as a single book, although origination periods experienced different rates, channels and customer conditions. The possible stories are that recent vintages deteriorate faster, that operational debit failures contaminate credit outcomes, or that product mix creates the apparent vintage effect.

This has returned because the previous answer was useful but not strong enough to become a standing rule. Use August 2023 as the new evidence point rather than recycling the earlier conclusion. There is no confirmed problem yet; this is a request to test an assumption before it becomes policy.

Please prepare a one-page finding note plus the underlying CSV for our own review. The output must help us decide which vintage needs deeper review and whether policy or operations owns the next action.

Data available: the latest closed loan files available by the request date, including affordability, pricing and origination risk fields; collections cases, promises to pay and recovery payments; debit-order mandates, collection dates, suspensions and cancellations; transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context; time-appropriate news and macro-event context.

Please state the limitation plainly: Macro events provide context, not a causal estimate by themselves.

Thanks
