Complaint closure quality and repeat harm

Hi all,

I may be joining dots that do not belong together, so please challenge the premise.

Complaint status alone may overstate resolution when the same customer returns, the transaction remains unresolved or the account closes. Please start with the decision we need to make, then show whether the available evidence is strong enough to support it.

Could the answer be that resolution notes are generic? Or are we actually seeing that resolved complaints do not recur? I also do not want us to miss the possibility that specific categories lead to repeat contact or attrition.

We looked at a version of this before. For the July 2020 review, please show what changed and whether the earlier conclusion still holds. The practical decision is which complaint outcomes need quality review and which root causes need fixing. Please send a one-page finding note plus the underlying CSV for our own review; I need the exceptions and counter-examples, not only an average.

Work from customer contacts, complaints and suggestions; transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context; monthly account snapshots, status events, limits, product enrolments and signatories. The analysis can identify recurrence and later behaviour, not customer satisfaction that was never recorded.

Regards
