Quick question: primary-bank behaviour, not account-open counts

Team,

Before this becomes another standing report, can we answer the real question?

The board keeps using active accounts as a proxy for customer primacy, and that assumption needs to be challenged. The possible stories are that fee or service friction precedes the drop in activity, that regular inflows and recurring payments indicate a primary relationship, or that customers keep the account open but move useful activity elsewhere.

We looked at a version of this before. For the November 2020 review, please show what changed and whether the earlier conclusion still holds. Please start with the decision we need to make, then show whether the available evidence is strong enough to support it.

Please prepare a control view with the exceptions, owner and reason each item was included. The output must help us decide how Keystone should define a primary customer and which customers need service recovery rather than marketing.

Data available: monthly account snapshots, status events, limits, product enrolments and signatories; transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context; debit-order mandates, collection dates, suspensions and cancellations; customer contacts, complaints and suggestions.

Please state the limitation plainly: Use transaction behaviour as a proxy. Do not claim to observe activity held at another bank.

Thanks
