Follow-up: resolved in the system, but resolved for the customer?

Morning,

I need help with something that sounds simple but probably is not.

Complaint status alone may overstate resolution when the same customer returns, the transaction remains unresolved or the account closes. The operating teams agree that more journeys are failing; they disagree on whether the customer, the bank or a downstream party owns the failure. The first extracts did not reconcile, which means source precedence and exclusions must be part of the answer.

The questions I would ask in the room are:

1. What would we expect to see if resolution notes are generic?
2. What evidence would instead support that specific categories lead to repeat contact or attrition?
3. How do we rule out that resolved complaints do not recur?

This has returned because the previous answer was useful but not strong enough to become a standing rule. Use July 2022 as the new evidence point rather than recycling the earlier conclusion. Please work towards which complaint outcomes need quality review and which root causes need fixing. A useful output would be a one-page finding note plus the underlying CSV for our own review.

Use customer contacts, complaints and suggestions; transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context; monthly account snapshots, status events, limits, product enrolments and signatories. One caution: The analysis can identify recurrence and later behaviour, not customer satisfaction that was never recorded.
