

Outlook

From	kabelo.radebe@executive.office.keystonebank.co.za
To	analytics.retail@keystonebank.co.za
Cc	product.fintech@keystonebank.co.za, pricing.customer.value@keystonebank.co.za
Sent	Mon, 07 Nov 2022 14:17:00 -0000

Follow-up: which customers actually treat Keystone as their main bank?

Hi all,

I may be joining dots that do not belong together, so please challenge the premise.

The board keeps using active accounts as a proxy for customer primacy, and that assumption needs to be challenged. Failure anecdotes are beginning to drive decisions, although retries and late posting may be making the problem look larger than the affected-customer population. Different teams have produced different answers from the same period, so population and timing rules need to be visible.

Could the answer be that customers keep the account open but move useful activity elsewhere? Or are we actually seeing that fee or service friction precedes the drop in activity? I also do not want us to miss the possibility that regular inflows and recurring payments indicate a primary relationship.

This has returned because the previous answer was useful but not strong enough to become a standing rule. Use November 2022 as the new evidence point rather than recycling the earlier conclusion. The practical decision is how Keystone should define a primary customer and which customers need service recovery rather than marketing. Please send a control view with the exceptions, owner and reason each item was included; I need the exceptions and counter-examples, not only an average.

Work from monthly account snapshots, status events, limits, product enrolments and signatories; transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context; debit-order mandates, collection dates, suspensions and cancellations; customer contacts, complaints and suggestions. Use transaction behaviour as a proxy. Do not claim to observe activity held at another bank.

Regards