Follow-up: fee outcomes after failed payments

Hi all,

I may be joining dots that do not belong together, so please challenge the premise.

Compliance wants to examine charges that follow failed, reversed or delayed transactions and whether complaints were resolved consistently. Failure anecdotes are beginning to drive decisions, although retries and late posting may be making the problem look larger than the affected-customer population. Different teams have produced different answers from the same period, so population and timing rules need to be visible.

Could the answer be that fees follow customer-caused failure? Or are we actually seeing that similar cases receive different remedies? I also do not want us to miss the possibility that bank-side delay creates avoidable charges.

This has returned because the previous answer was useful but not strong enough to become a standing rule. Use October 2023 as the new evidence point rather than recycling the earlier conclusion. The practical decision is whether a control, remediation population or policy clarification is required. Please send a one-page finding note plus the underlying CSV for our own review; I need the exceptions and counter-examples, not only an average.

Work from transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context; monthly account snapshots, status events, limits, product enrolments and signatories; customer contacts, complaints and suggestions; debit-order mandates, collection dates, suspensions and cancellations. The analysis can identify patterns and comparable cases; Compliance must interpret policy and legal obligations.
