Follow-up: conversion is not the same as campaign impact

Team,

Before this becomes another standing report, can we answer the real question?

Analytics has been asked to report campaign success, but selected customers may already have been more likely to convert. The possible stories are that targeting explains the apparent lift, that service problems suppress otherwise suitable offers, or that the campaign creates incremental response.

This has returned because the previous answer was useful but not strong enough to become a standing rule. Use May 2024 as the new evidence point rather than recycling the earlier conclusion. Please start with the decision we need to make, then show whether the available evidence is strong enough to support it.

Please prepare a working Excel file with the exception population and clear columns. The output must help us decide the treatment, control, success window and guardrail measures before the next campaign launches.

Data available: campaign design and customer responses; monthly account snapshots, status events, limits, product enrolments and signatories; transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context; customer contacts, complaints and suggestions.

Please state the limitation plainly: Historical campaign responses alone do not identify causal impact where no comparable control group exists.

Thanks
