Do bundled products deepen relationships or just decorate accounts? - 2025 control review

Hi all,

I may be joining dots that do not belong together, so please challenge the premise.

Product bundles are recorded at account level, but Pricing needs to know whether customers use optional features and remain active. There is no confirmed problem yet; this is a request to test an assumption before it becomes policy.

Could the answer be that default products are mistaken for cross-sell? Or are we actually seeing that some bundles increase service contact without increasing use? I also do not want us to miss the possibility that optional products deepen activity.

This has returned because the previous answer was useful but not strong enough to become a standing rule. Use December 2025 as the new evidence point rather than recycling the earlier conclusion. The practical decision is which bundle components should be retained, repriced or removed from campaigns. Please send a short decision pack with no more than five slides and an attached evidence table; I need the exceptions and counter-examples, not only an average.

Work from monthly account snapshots, status events, limits, product enrolments and signatories; transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context; customer contacts, complaints and suggestions; campaign design and customer responses. Product enrolment is not the same as product usage; define observable use before measuring adoption.
