Follow-up: which customers actually treat Keystone as their main bank?

Hi team,

The board keeps using active accounts as a proxy for customer primacy, and that assumption needs to be challenged.

This has returned because the previous answer was useful but not strong enough to become a standing rule. Use June 2021 as the new evidence point rather than recycling the earlier conclusion. Several teams are reporting more failed or retried activity than they expected, but they do not agree on the cause. Different teams have produced different answers from the same period, so population and timing rules need to be visible.

Can you test these explanations rather than choosing one at the start?

- regular inflows and recurring payments indicate a primary relationship
- customers keep the account open but move useful activity elsewhere
- fee or service friction precedes the drop in activity

The decision is how Keystone should define a primary customer and which customers need service recovery rather than marketing. Please give us a control view with the exceptions, owner and reason each item was included.

You should be able to build the evidence from monthly account snapshots, status events, limits, product enrolments and signatories; transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context; debit-order mandates, collection dates, suspensions and cancellations; customer contacts, complaints and suggestions. Use transaction behaviour as a proxy. Do not claim to observe activity held at another bank.

Thanks
