Follow-up: the dispute has three timelines and they do not agree

Hi,

This came up in a working session and nobody had the same definition.

A customer dispute cannot be assessed from the complaint text alone because authorisation, posting, reversal and contact dates differ.

I do not want a dashboard that simply counts the outcome. Start with the competing explanations: the customer saw a temporary posting as final; the complaint outcome does not match the underlying evidence; or a bank-side delay caused the loss.

Failure anecdotes are beginning to drive decisions, although retries and late posting may be making the problem look larger than the affected-customer population. Different teams have produced different answers from the same period, so population and timing rules need to be visible. This has returned because the previous answer was useful but not strong enough to become a standing rule. Use December 2021 as the new evidence point rather than recycling the earlier conclusion.

What we need to decide is the evidence position and whether remediation should precede correspondence. Please bring a control view with the exceptions, owner and reason each item was included, including a few cases we can trace from source to conclusion.

The available evidence is transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context; customer contacts, complaints and suggestions; ATM attempts, host responses, PIN attempts, blocked-card state and latency. Use statements only where they exist and do not invent merchant evidence or call recordings.

Thank you
