Follow-up: the growth number needs a quality check

Hi all,

I may be joining dots that do not belong together, so please challenge the premise.

The headline activity story is positive, but EXCO cannot tell whether it reflects durable customer relationships or short-lived transaction volume. Several teams are reporting more failed or retried activity than they expected, but they do not agree on the cause.

Could the answer be that activity is concentrated in a small set of customers? Or are we actually seeing that new accounts are becoming primary relationships? I also do not want us to miss the possibility that service failures are creating volume without creating value.

This has returned because the previous answer was useful but not strong enough to become a standing rule. Use June 2022 as the new evidence point rather than recycling the earlier conclusion. The practical decision is where to invest and which headline measure should be retired from the management pack. Please send a model-ready table, data dictionary and an honest baseline; I need the exceptions and counter-examples, not only an average.

Work from monthly account snapshots, status events, limits, product enrolments and signatories; transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context; customer contacts, complaints and suggestions; campaign design and customer responses. Do not describe account activity as profitability; the data does not contain a full revenue and cost allocation.

Regards
