Primary-bank behaviour, not account-open counts - 2024 control review

Hi,

This came up in a working session and nobody had the same definition.

The board keeps using active accounts as a proxy for customer primacy, and that assumption needs to be challenged.

I do not want a dashboard that simply counts the outcome. Start with the competing explanations: fee or service friction precedes the drop in activity; regular inflows and recurring payments indicate a primary relationship; or customers keep the account open but move useful activity elsewhere.

The operating teams agree that more journeys are failing; they disagree on whether the customer, the bank or a downstream party owns the failure. This has returned because the previous answer was useful but not strong enough to become a standing rule. Use April 2024 as the new evidence point rather than recycling the earlier conclusion.

What we need to decide is how Keystone should define a primary customer and which customers need service recovery rather than marketing. Please bring a one-page finding note plus the underlying CSV for our own review, including a few cases we can trace from source to conclusion.

The available evidence is monthly account snapshots, status events, limits, product enrolments and signatories; transaction-level timestamps, channels, amounts, statuses and error context; debit-order mandates, collection dates, suspensions and cancellations; customer contacts, complaints and suggestions. Use transaction behaviour as a proxy. Do not claim to observe activity held at another bank.

Thank you
