Approval rate is not the only funnel outcome - 2024 control review

Hi,

This came up in a working session and nobody had the same definition.

Loan Products wants to understand application drop-off, decline reasons, booked loans and early repayment stress as one journey.

I do not want a dashboard that simply counts the outcome. Start with the competing explanations: affordability declines are concentrated by product; documentation friction drives drop-off; or some high-conversion channels create weaker early outcomes.

The discussion is currently being driven by anecdotes, and the teams involved are describing the same customers differently. This has returned because the previous answer was useful but not strong enough to become a standing rule. Use October 2024 as the new evidence point rather than recycling the earlier conclusion.

What we need to decide is which application step, policy explanation or channel process should change. Please bring a one-page finding note plus the underlying CSV for our own review, including a few cases we can trace from source to conclusion.

The available evidence is the latest closed loan files available by the request date, including affordability, pricing and origination risk fields; monthly customer and KYC snapshots; customer contacts, complaints and suggestions; collections cases, promises to pay and recovery payments. Do not optimise approval rate without affordability, conduct and later-outcome controls.

Thank you
